SAMPLE 1 — SHORT-FORM VIDEO SCRIPT

Title: “The Question You’re Afraid to Ask Your Doctor”

HOOK — 0–3 seconds

Doctor looks into camera:

PAUSE.

“It isn’t.”

BODY

Patients sometimes sit quietly because they don’t want to appear difficult.

They nod when they don’t fully understand.

They leave the hospital remembering the prescription...

...but forgetting the question they wanted to ask.

Here’s the thing:

You don’t have to understand everything the first time.

Ask.

Ask what the diagnosis means.

Ask what the medication does.

Ask what happens next.

Ask again if the explanation wasn't clear.

Your health is not an exam.

You don't lose marks for asking questions.

CTA

The next time you visit your doctor, don't leave with unanswered questions.

Speak up.

Your health deserves your full understanding.

SAMPLE 2 — STORY-DRIVEN VIDEO CONCEPT

Title: "The 11:47 PM Phone Call"

FORMAT: 45–60 second social video

OPENING

Black screen.

Phone ringing.

11:47 PM

Text appears:

"Some phone calls change everything."

SCENE 1

A woman answers the phone.

Her expression changes.

We don't immediately hear what the person says.

SCENE 2

She grabs her bag.

Keys.

Shoes.

Door.

Cut.

SCENE 3

Hospital corridor.

Fast footsteps.

Waiting room.

Clock.

12:31 AM.

SCENE 4

A doctor walks toward her.

We see the woman's face.

The doctor says:

“She's going to be okay.”

Silence.

The woman closes her eyes.

Breathes.

A tear.

Not from sadness.

Relief.

VOICEOVER

"We talk about hospitals as buildings.

Walls.

Beds.

Machines.

But sometimes a hospital is simply the place where someone receives the news they've been praying for."

END CARD

Healthcare isn't only about treating illness.

It's about protecting hope when people need it most.

SAMPLE 3 — SOCIAL MEDIA COPY

Topic: Preventive Healthcare

You don't have to feel sick before you take your health seriously.

That's one of the easiest mistakes to make.

We wait for the headache that won't go away.

The pain that becomes impossible to ignore.

The symptom that finally scares us enough to book an appointment.

But healthcare shouldn't always begin with an emergency.

Sometimes it begins with a check-up.

A question.

A screening.

A conversation with a healthcare professional.

Because finding a problem early can give you something incredibly valuable: time.

Don't wait for your body to shout before you start listening.

Book that check-up.

BONUS — CONTENT IDEA

“Things Patients Google Before Seeing a Doctor”

A short-form series built around the questions people are already searching online but may feel embarrassed asking a healthcare professional.

Examples:

- “Is this symptom normal?”
- “Why does this keep happening?”
- “Should I be worried?”
- “Can I take this with my other medication?”
- “Do I really need this test?”
- “What happens during this procedure?”

Each episode takes one question and answers it in simple, responsible, non-alarming language, with a healthcare professional providing the accurate explanation.

WHY IT WORKS

The audience already has the questions.

The content simply gives those questions a safe place to be answered.

MY CREATIVE APPROACH

I don't want healthcare content to sound like an advertisement pretending to be medical advice.

I want it to sound human, useful, responsible and memorable.

My approach is simple:

Find the question.

Find the human emotion behind it.

Build the story.

Give the audience something useful.

Then give them a reason to take the next step.
