

THE GROWTH DECISION

A practical proposal for turning customer friction into measurable business growth.

THE HOOK

Good businesses lose customers in small moments.

A customer discovers your product.

They show interest.

They visit your website, ask a question, compare their options—and then hesitate.

Not because they don't want what you offer.

Because something in the journey creates friction.

THE QUESTION

How much growth is being lost simply because the customer journey is harder than it needs to be?

DON'T FIX EVERYTHING. FIX WHAT COSTS YOU MOST.

THE THINKING

Three problems can quietly turn interested customers into lost opportunities.

01	FRICITION Customers hesitate because the next step isn't obvious.
02	CONFUSION Customers need more explanation before they feel confident moving forward.
03	DROP-OFF Potential customers disappear before the business understands why.

THE APPROACH

Simplify the journey.
Clarify the message.
Measure what changes.

The goal isn't to change everything. It's to identify the moments that have the greatest impact—and improve those first.

FROM PROBLEM → TO ACTION

THE PROPOSAL

- 01 DISCOVER
Identify where customers lose momentum.

- 02 RESTRUCTURE
Simplify the experience and communication.

- 03 IMPLEMENT
Put the highest-impact changes into action.

- 04 MEASURE
Track what improves—and what still needs attention.

THE OUTCOME

The objective isn't to create another document.

It's to create a decision the business can act on.

Fictional portfolio sample — created to demonstrate business writing, strategic thinking, structure and presentation.
