

THE LOST CUSTOMER FILE

An investigation into where good prospects disappear—and what the business can do about it.

Some customers don't say “no.”

They simply disappear.

THE CASE

THE CUSTOMER WAS INTERESTED.

Imagine a company receiving 1,000 website visitors, generating 120 serious inquiries, holding 40 sales conversations—and closing just 11 customers.

At first glance, the business might celebrate the 11 sales. But the real story is hidden in everything that happened before the sale.

THE QUESTION

What happened to the other 29 people who were already close enough to talk?

The answer may not be a lack of demand. It may be a broken journey between interest and action.

THREE PLACES THE CUSTOMER DISAPPEARS

The most expensive problems are often the quiet ones—the moments nobody notices until the customer is gone.

01

THE FIRST IMPRESSION

The customer arrives. They don't immediately understand “Why should I choose this?” So they leave.

02

THE MOMENT OF DOUBT

The customer becomes interested. Then questions appear: Is this right for me? Can I trust this company? What happens next? If those questions remain unanswered, hesitation takes over.

03

THE FINAL STEP

The customer is almost ready. Then the process becomes complicated—too many clicks, too much information, too little clarity. The opportunity disappears.

THE FINDING

SOMETIMES IT'S FRICTION.

THE RECOMMENDATION

DON'T CHASE MORE CUSTOMERS. FIRST, STOP LOSING THE ONES ALREADY INTERESTED.

A practical response starts by tracing the existing journey, finding the highest-friction moments, and improving those moments before spending more to attract additional traffic.

THE INVESTIGATION → ACTION FRAMEWORK

- | | | |
|----|-----------------|--|
| 01 | TRACE | Follow the customer's journey from first contact to decision. |
| 02 | IDENTIFY | Find the moments where interest turns into hesitation. |
| 03 | REWRITE | Improve the messages, explanations and calls-to-action around those moments. |
| 04 | CONVERT | Measure what changes and continuously improve the journey. |

THE CONCLUSION

EVERY LOST CUSTOMER LEAVES A CLUE.

The question is whether the business is paying attention.

The goal isn't simply to attract more people.
It's to make it easier for the right people to say yes.

Fictional portfolio sample — created to demonstrate business writing, persuasive thinking, strategic communication and document design.